His Admirable Art Gives Pleasure to s Large Audience-Caruso as Faust and Mme. Eames as Marguerite-The Chorus Distinguished by Bad Singing

Gounod's "Faust" has taken a new lease of life at the Metropolitan Opera. House since Mr. Caruso learned how to sing the title rôle. To be sure, he does not look the rejuvenated doctor, and at no time does he realize the ideal of the gallant and romantic personage whom Barbin and Carré evolved out of Goethe's psychological atudy. But he has what the music of the rôle demands, to wit, a luscious quality of voice, and he has to a considerable extent overcome the difficulties of singing in the French language, which troubled him so much last season. Whether it was depression of spirits caused by the failure of his bank or not, he was not careful in all his singing last night, and some of his attacks were not worthy of such an artist. But he took the high C in "Salut demeure. What more could the spirit of mortal

After this digression on the subsidiary topic of the only Caruso something may he said about the general performance of "Faust." In the first place let the chronicler record that vital fact, dear to every truly artistic manager's heart, that the house was crowded. For the Metropolitan it was an enthusiastic audience, too. It is a significant fact that at the Broadway establishment three curtain calls constitute a triumph, while at Mr. Hammerstein's theatre they would mean a lamentable failure. Anything under six calls there is regarded as chilling.

Mr. Plancon, who made his first appearhe said about the general performance of

Mr. Plançon, who made his first appear ance this season singing Mephistopheles, was called forward no less than five times after the kermess scene and he got two wreaths. To classify this success it would be necessary to employ the vocabulary of the late Tody Hamilton. And yet the distinguished basso was not "in good voice." He was a little hourse and somewhat scant of breath. But his admirable art was, as it always has been, a joy to those who

It was a delight to hear a genuine bass voice, big, full and resonant, in Gounod's rausic, to hear a style whose elegance was as great as that of the score, to be able to hear all the words of the text delivered with a diction that has not its fellow on this stage. It was not without its significance. too, that Mr. Plancon's acting, while in strict keeping with the conventions, while free from extravagance or the slightest search after sensation, was equal to the requirements of the rôle. It kept Mephistopheles in the picture instead of making him stand out in amazing prominence like an Outcalt caricature in a gallery of old engravings.

The other members of the cast were Mme. Eames as Marguerite, Mme. Jacoby as Siebel and Mr. Stracciari as Valentin Mme. Eames had not sung previously this season in Gounod's opera, and the audience welcomed her most cordially. She long ago established her right to be regarded as a most agreeable singer of this music. It would be pleasant to record that the background supplied to the principal figures was such as to give them their appropriate surroundings, but this cannot be said. The chorus sang badly, very badly indeed, particularly in the kermess scene, in which things were not only at sixes and sevens out even at sevens and three-quarters. At any rate no mortal conductor could sang, and certainly Mr. Bovy could not.

Just why "Faust" should be permitted days of the present régime is not alvays occupied, and certainly is not sent in. when the choral and orchestral portions of Gounod's masterpiece are presented as they were last night.

CHURCH IN A LAWSUIT.

Building Society Seeks Money It Advanced

Evidence was heard by Vice-Chancellor Howell in Newark yesterday in a legal fight between the Congregational Building Society of New York and the First Congregational Church of Jersey City, of which Rev. John L. Scudder, the "Boxing Parson," is pastor. When the South Bergen Reformed Church was financially embarrassed some years ago and was unable to get help within that denomination it was decided to go outside, and the result was that the ongregation was merged with that of the irst Congregational Church.

Money was advanced by the building society to take up the mortgages on the South Reformed Church property and it is now alleged that the money so advanced was a grant, not a loan. The society admits that a small part of it was a grant, but der that all of it was. It is to have the court decide how much of the amount was a loan

All arrangements for the marriage had been indefinitely postponed. Miss Green and her brother sailed on Monday for the Mediterranean on the steamship Moltke.

THE ASTORIA HOTEL, with RESTAURANT of particular excellence, is under the same management as the celebrated Savoy and West-End Hotel of Carlshad, and the Hotel Imperial of Nice. The Astoria was opened October, 1907, and contains every tuxury and comfort known in modern hotel construction. The location on the Place de l'Etoile and Champs Elysees, facing the Arc de Triomphe, is the finest in Paris. Electric cars from all parts of Paris to the Hotel make it easy to reach the smartest and prottiest Restaurant in Paris, and view the sonstantly shanging panorama of the Champs Elysces, seen from the Astoria.
